The Umbrella Landmark.

While in Dakota in 1885 a friend and cided to go in search of our friends, and H. Reeves, a roung real-estate agent. for fear we would not find them and not find our way back we fixed our umbrella in the ground as a landmark. The handle of the umbrels had been broken and I parlor ceilings. Those who heard it might we found our friends, and the umbrella was forgotten until about eight months afterwards, when we happened to need it. Then we thought where we had left it, and, upon going to the spot, what was our bewilderment at seeing the umbrella at the top of a cottonwood tree about ten feet in height. It had apparently been wafted there by a friendly whence the disturbing sounds ing the ladies in trembling a about ten reet in height entity been watted there by a friendly breeze. But, on nearer approach, we discovered that it was indeed at the top of the tree, but the tree was nothing more or less than the stick that had taken root and grown to this enormous height. We did not disturb it, and it is now a Dakota landwark. K. R. K.
